

A strange day in history!

This week, Mr. President Biden's two stances showed the depth of his wisdom and his beliefs about man, the world, interests, and international politics:

First, he condemned the behavior of the Turkish army and government regarding the bombing of residential and non-residential areas of Kurds in Kurdistan-Syria and considered it a threat to the national security of the United States of America.

Also, his trip to Israel and meeting with the prime minister and the war cabinet of this country and presenting this message to the world: America supports always Israel.

In his second stance, he also expressed his concerns about humanitarian issues and asked Israel's Prime Minister Mr. Netanyahu to allow water, food, and medicine to enter the Gaza Strip through Rafah. To be honest, considering the depth of the crimes and brutality of the Hamas group in the October 7th tragedy in the kibbutz of southern Israel, asking the Israeli government and nation to show mercy to the people of Gaza is a surreal issue.

Because the wound is on their soul, not us. We only feel the pain of those blows, but the wounds of those criminal blows have affected the people of Israel, and perhaps many years will have to come and go for their effects to diminish.

What was far from wise was the cancellation of President Biden's meeting with the heads of several Arab countries. Maybe in the future, King Abdullah, President Mahmoud Abbas, and President Abdul Fattah Sisi will write in their memoirs that we had to refrain from meeting President Biden due to the pressure of public opinion. But frankly, public opinion is not always right.

What was strange was that the President of Egypt did not cancel the meeting with Mr. Schultz, the Chancellor of Germany. This strange treatment of the American president is caused by the deep prejudice of the Arab societies towards the superstitions that are presented and promoted to their masses as Arab-Islamic values by the chauvinist and extremist theorists of the Arab world.

While the devotion and sincerity they show toward the Russian dictator are surprising. Maybe it is because the Arab world has not yet reached that level of political, social, and cultural development to understand the position of "the logic of coexistence and mutual respect".

With all the criticisms I have on the performance of the White House and the US State Department regarding their approach to the terrorist regime of Iran I see that America and the West treat the Arabs with more appeasement and compassion, and I am surprised that they have seen the least practical gratitude from the Arab world.

Perhaps this great affection and attention of America and the free world to the Arab world has created an illusion among the Arabs that they are bigger than other nations. But it is never like that. What has been exported to the world from Arab culture is extreme Islam, violence, terror, and death.

What started on the 7th of October and was added to last night has made us who are part of the nations of the Middle East think because we are afraid of the future of our existence and we think that these angry, extreme, and irrational neighbors bring us destruction and war, death, and they present religion as one of the means of justifying their inherent violence, which their ancient poets addressed in the pre-Islam era, and considered murder, theft, and rape of women as a source of pride.

Islam was only a unifying and ideological factor for their violent actions, even though Islam and the Qur'an arose from the same Arab cultural violence and reflect the method and character and individual and social behavioral characteristics of the Arab element.

Now that I'm writing this article, I'm very careful not to choose words that will offend the Arab people, but I really can't use any other words except these words.

I'm sorry that I live in this bad and unfair time, but what should be done? I should try to tell the truth. At least I think so. It is a crime against humanity to organize the repressed hatred of the people of society in an aggressive way using ideas and superstitions.

What is happening in our world is unfortunate. We must try to protect ourselves and our material and spiritual assets, and defense and war is, unfortunately, the way to protect our lives and our material and spiritual assets. War and defense is a costly option, but when we have to choose it, we must do it.

In the end, the one who knows all these things and benefits from them is Iran's Mullah-Pasdars regime. This regime is a summary of the evils of Iranian society and all the societies that has sent its spies there to use the experiences of those societies to increase its destructive power and send the world to the valley of destruction.

The Iranian regime is a corrupt and thieving system that uses all illegitimate means to increase its wealth.
