Khanaqin – Kurdistan Save the Children (KSC), through its Youth Activity Center-Khanaqin, has made a significant stride in environmental preservation by releasing over 7,000 fish into the Alwand Dam in Khanaqin District.

This initiative aims to revitalize the river's ecosystem, enhance its natural beauty and fish wealth, and promote environmental awareness in the region. The project underscores KSC's commitment to addressing environmental challenges while fostering a deeper connection between the district's youth and nature. By restoring the ecological balance of the Alwand Dam, KSC hopes to inspire similar conservation initiatives across Khanaqin and beyond.

Speaking at the event, KSC's Youth Ability Development program manager, Dyari Mustafa explained, "The Alwand Dam was chosen due to the lack of environmental activities and services in the area. This project is a crucial step toward restoring balance and engaging the community in preserving our natural resources and enhancing fish wealth."

This initiative is part of KSC's broader strategy to integrate environmental protection into its programs. By promoting sustainable practices and increasing public awareness about the importance of conservation, KSC continues to play a vital role in safeguarding the region's natural environment.

The organization hopes this project will encourage more environmental actions, particularly in areas with limited access to conservation services.
